

I always remember a very important point in the teacher evaluation. When a new teacher is completing or reinforcing his/her subjects objective, an element called teacher's personality enters the evaluation. This is something you cannot record on paper. It is that close bond Mono E Mono between teacher and the group he/she creates. It is that human contact between one generation to another – that human element that makes student's personality change. When the student feels that this teacher cares about him/her through a direct eye contact or pointing it is like watching young people watching Fourth of July fireworks. Student will appear to want more information. Regardless the maturation of the student in the classroom, a definitive appearance will show from a student.

Wayne Kensel